CML's Mission:

Since 1873, CML has kept a promise to the citizens of Franklin County to be the place to inspire reading, share resources and connect people, with a vision of a thriving community where wisdom prevails.

With millions of books, eBooks, digital products and tools; welcoming community spaces; friendly and knowledgeable staff – and an open to all philosophy – CML's 23 locations are the cornerstones of the communities they serve.

Our library is steadfastly committed to adapting its strategies and tactics to deliver the programs, services and facilities that our communities need, focusing its strategic planning on the areas where the library's efforts will have the most impact.

CML's history:

The library system that would become CML got its start as the Public Library Reading Room, which opened in 1873 in City Hall (on the site of what is now the Ohio Theatre). In 1903, a $200,000 gift from Andrew Carnegie provided the funding for Main Library, which was built on a plot formerly occupied by the Governor's Mansion. The building opened to the public in 1907.

CML has embarked on an aspirational building program to renovate or rebuild its locations:
